

'I loved New York so much, I moved there'

When Jane Brown first visited the Big Apple, it was love at first sight. 'I was born in a small country town in WA and moved to Sydney when I was 21,' she says. 'I went to New York on holiday when I was 24 and loved it from the first day: the architecture, the smells, the people, the pace, the beauty, the heartbeat.'

Working then as a Qantas flight attendant, Jane knew she wanted to live in New York one day. Fast forward 20 years and Jane now calls a chic apartment on Wall Street her home.

Establishing herself as a homes stylist, Jane has carved a niche in the city that never sleeps.

'It has more than lived up to my expectations,' she says. 'Moving here and starting all over again as a forty-something woman has been one of the toughest things that I have ever done, but I'm living my dream.'

Visit www.janebrowninteriors.com.